I woke up at the break of dawn. This was only the third day of our religious pilgrimage, but my legs were stiff and tired already. At first, I was __11__ to help carry the statue of the sea goddess all the way to the end, but I wasn't so sure I could make it anymore.

The special __12__ on which the statue rested was quite heavy, and it's no exaggeration to say that we still needed to cover hundreds of kilometers on __13__. Even though we had six carriers altogether, various fears started to creep into my mind. __14__ if my legs simply folded along the way and I dropped the goddess? Wouldn't the other carriers laugh at me or be angry at me for letting the goddess fall?

Right then and there, I decided to pray to Mazu. I asked for not only physical strength but also the courage I needed in order to continue. The more I prayed, __15__ I believed in myself. Finally, I was ready to get up and keep going. For the next six days, the goddess felt much lighter than before.

Before you head out to a fun event where there will be many people, you should be aware of the dangers of a crowd crush.

Though the risk of crowd crush is rare, it can be deadly when it happens. __31__ In the past, such instances have caused horrible injury and even death. To avoid such a fate, it's best to escape the crush before it happens.

Before attending a crowded event, look up a map of the venue. __32__ Once you arrive, choosing the right spot can be crucial. Avoid the middle or front; instead, pick the back or edges of a crowd. It's also important to trust your feelings. Stay aware to see if you feel packed in at any point. The more crowded the event becomes, the sooner you may need to retreat to a safe place.

If you do end up in a crush, here's how you can stay safe. The most important thing you can do is stay on your feet. __33__ Also make sure to move with the flow of the crowd. Trying to move against a horde of people will only end in disaster.

Helping others is another great way to keep everyone safe. Once one person falls down, more people tend to fall over them. So if your neighbor in the crowd falls to the ground, help them up.

A common cause of death in a crowd crush isn't being crushed but rather losing air. __34__ This allows space between you and the person in front of you. It also protects your chest and lungs from being crushed on the ground should you fall.

There is usually fun where the crowds are, so enjoy yourself. But remember to stay alert!

- (A) To do this, spread your feet apart and bend your knees a little.
- (B) This will give you an idea of the surroundings – pay special attention to any exits.
- (C) It's best to hold out your arms in front of your chest.
- (D) Crowd crush occurs when many people are packed together and begin to fall over one another.

Every year, Thailand sees millions of tourists, many of whom have a lot of fun riding elephants. In fact, this activity is often the highlight of a visitor's vacation, and these rides bring a lot of money into the Thai economy. However, there is a dark side to elephant tourism that would horrify many travelers.

Due to high demand in Thailand's tourism industry, the illegal trade of young elephants has developed. Being highly social creatures in their natural habitat, elephants often travel great distances in herds that are led by females. Unfortunately, a number of young wild elephants are lured away from their mothers and into traps by brutal trappers. Any females from the herd which try to protect their innocent babies may be shot mercilessly. The elephants that fall victim to the traps are then sold to tour operators. That is when the real horror begins, as the elephants are often violently abused. These young elephants are confined in very small cages. Furthermore, they are beaten without mercy for days and even struck with sharp nails. Such psychological torture and physical abuse, both of which cause extreme suffering, are committed to make them obedient to their human trainers.

Once the elephants are tamed, they are forced into a life of slavery. Many of them are made to carry people on their backs at tourist attractions and elephant camps. Since an elephant's spine is vulnerable to pressure from above, carrying heavy tourists for hours every day can lead to painful, permanent back injuries. What's more, they are denied an adequate amount of food and water, which further contributes to their exhaustion. Worse still, these elephants are beaten as they work; their flesh is struck with bullhooks. On average, more than 13 million tourists ride elephants in Thailand every year. This puts money in the pockets of those who capture and take advantage of them, which allows the cruel elephant trade to continue.

Supply never comes without demand, and it is high time that we dealt with the roots of this problem. When you visit Thailand, avoid companies profiting from elephant tourism. As an alternative, visit one of Thailand's three national parks where wild elephants roam free. There, you can take pleasure in seeing these complex, intelligent animals as they happily go about their lives in peace.

35. Why are young elephants captured and sold to tour operators in Thailand?

- (A) To protect them from predators
- (B) To increase their social interactions
- (C) To meet the demand in the tourism industry
- (D) To release them into the wild

36. How are young elephants typically treated to make them obedient to human trainers?

- (A) Reward-based training
- (B) Positive reinforcement

- (C) Natural bonding processes
- (D) Violent abuse and psychological torture

37. What suggestion is given to tourists to address the issue of cruel elephant tourism in Thailand?

- (A) Visit national parks where wild elephants roam freely
- (B) Support companies profiting from elephant tourism
- (C) Encourage the capture of more elephants
- (D) Ignore the ethical concerns and enjoy the elephant rides

38. What is the author's attitude toward tourists who participate in elephant rides in Thailand?

- (A) Supportive and encouraging
- (B) Neutral and objective
- (C) Critical and disapproving
- (D) Indifferent and unconcerned

If something is interesting, fun, and exciting in some way, people may become addicted to it. Typically, when we think of addiction, we often picture quite negative behavior, including taking drugs, smoking, or drinking too much alcohol. But what about using the internet too much?

The idea of internet addiction was first theorized in 1995 by Dr. Ivan Goldberg, but it was talked about in a somewhat joking manner then. At that time, many homes still did not have a computer, and there were no cellphones because they hadn't hit the market yet. Nowadays, we live in the digital age, where people have constant access to the internet if they wish. Mental health experts now believe that internet addiction actually exists, but there is no general agreement as to how exactly how it should be defined.

A general rule regarding addiction is that it occurs when a compulsion to engage in an activity results in a negative impact on people's daily lives or causes them to have mental distress. However, the question with internet addiction is, "How much internet use is too much?" Because of this, it shouldn't be surprising that estimates vary widely as to how much of the world's population is addicted to the internet. Some studies suggest about 38% of those with internet access suffer from this type of problem. In contrast, other studies have indicated that it is more likely that only about 8% of internet users are addicted to it. Whatever the true figures are, individuals whose online behavior has led to social isolation, poor sleeping habits, or financial problems should consider seeking help to improve their quality of life.
