In 1967, the United States’ space program had its first big accident. Three astronauts died in the fire. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) began a new program to help stop future fires and decided to make a mascot. It found the perfect choice in Snoopy, a very popular dog in the comic Peanuts. The dog loved the idea of flying and dreamed of going to space. Now, astronauts usually touch the huge toy, Snoopy, for good luck before they leave the Earth. They also wear Snoopy pin on the uniform and put a small Snoopy toy in their pocket to help them remember to be safe. Interestingly, in the comic stories, Snoopy and his flying dog house did land on the moon four months before the first astronauts in 1969.
